Possible Behavioral Health Issues Around Holiday

Perception of pandemic ending may result in high-risk behavior

With the summer months here, and the perception of an end to the pandemic, those who have been, or perceived to have been, negatively impacted by life over the past year may be at increased risk of impulsive behavior.

The Washington State Department of Health has issued guidance and requested actions around the SAFE model – along with resources on behavioral health safety, decision making and resilience.

Please review the attached provider alert regarding July 4 celebrations and other summertime gatherings.
